Biography:
René was born in 1934 in Luxembourg. His parents, Mira and Wolf, emigrated from Poland in search of better opportunities. René had a happy childhood surrounded by lots of friends and family members. René’s parents descended from Jewish families in Poland and they practiced some Jewish religious traditions. When the Germans invaded Luxembourg in May 1940, René’s family moved to Belgium, which was also occupied by the Germans, and they lived there for two years. In hopes of escaping Europe, the family fled to the south of France by boat, but they were arrested by French police. René’s mother was deported and he was sent to live in a group home run by a Jewish organization in 1942. The organization, recognizing the danger that Jewish children faced, sent him to live with foster families and then in a Catholic convent school under a false name. After the war, René hoped to reunite with his parents, but they never returned after being deported. He continued to live in France and then moved to Poland, China and the United States before settling in Canada, where he worked as a professor.

“‘I did feel like a stranger in a world that was not my own and was compelled, paradoxically perhaps, to be true to my false identity at all times.’
— RENÉ GOLDMAN

Meet René Goldman is a Holocaust survivor who immigrated to Canada after the war and settled in British Columbia. You can learn about his experiences by reading his memoir, A Childhood Adrift, or on the digital resource Re:Collection.

Below is some background that will help you understand René’s story.

Historical Context:
René’s story during the Holocaust takes place in three different countries. When World War II began, his family lived in Luxembourg, a small country located in Western Europe between France, Belgium and Germany. Luxembourg was occupied by the German army in May 1940. Next, his family moved to Belgium, located beside Luxembourg, and also occupied by the Germans in 1940. The German army controlled Belgium and the German occupation government gradually put in place many different anti-Jewish policies. The last place René’s family lived was France, which was also occupied by the German army in 1940. The Germans occupied the northern part of France, called the Occupied Zone, and put in place many anti-Jewish policies. The southern part of France, called the Free Zone, was run by a new French government called Vichy that went along with German policies and orders, and even created its own anti-Jewish policies that applied to the whole country. French police helped arrest Jews to deport to Nazi camps where most were killed, starting in 1942. Due to the increasing risk of capture by the French police or the German occupiers, many Jews went into hiding by using false papers and pretending to be Christian. There were organizations that helped Jewish children, like René, find safe places to hide. France was liberated by the Allies in the summer and fall of 1944. Approximately 77,000 Jews in France were killed during the Holocaust, including René’s parents.
